Did 2003 go by like a flash for you? What a year it's been. From Raging Bull to Mad Cow, the world of business and finance has seen its ups and downs. We witnessed new highs, but have suffered record lows. New shareholder heroes have arisen, while greedy villains lay in ashes. Actors have again become politicians, as Wall Street pins hope on politics to keep the market afloat. Wall $treet Week with FORTUNE reviews 2003 and looks ahead to 2004. Is it time to hide the explosive gains of the 2003 rally under the mattress? Technology, gold and small cap stocks all surged into the stratosphere, but it's time now to look beyond the stars. Our fortune tellers tell all. It's the first annual Wall $treet Week with FORTUNE Bonehead Awards! We came up with the most ludicrous, ridiculous, and outright dumbest acts played out by the masters of business and finance.

From Pennsylvania Avenue to Wall Street to Main Street, politicians, pundits and investors are trying to figure exactly how the 2004 campaigns and elections will impact the market, the economy, and the overall investment outlook. Greg Mankiw, President Bush's economic advisor, will explain why the White House is so confident about the nation's economic future. Money manager and Wall $treet Week with FORTUNE contributor Michael Farr and Steve Leuthold, chairman of The Leuthold Group, will discuss what investors need to watch out for during the campaign. Also, President Bush wants social security funds to be invested in the stock market. His opponents think this is a very bad idea. The outcome of this debate is crucial to the more than 70 million boomers set to retire in the next few - and fast approaching - coming years. Former Wall Street titans Jon Corzine, currently U.S. Senator from New Jersey and formerly, co-chairman and co-CEO of Goldman Sachs, and Donald Marron, former chairman and CEO of

He reports that what Americans know about their tax system has nothing to do with the reality of it, and readily admits that for most of his 37 years of investigative reporting, he did not understand the tax system himself. David Brancaccio talks to Johnston about some of the surprising things revealed in his new book, PERFECTLY LEGAL: THE COVERT CAMPAIGN TO RIG OUR TAX SYSTEM TO BENEFIT THE SUPER-RICH, AND CHEAT EVERYBODY ELSE. "The fundamental thing I've learned is that the members of Congress who are passing these laws don't have any idea about their impact," says Johnston. Health care could end up being the No. 1 issue in this Presidential campaign. As the debate heats up, what will happen to your health care -- and to health care industry investments? From health care to another hot button issue: Jobs. The unemployment rate fell to 5.6 percent in January, but the economy produced only 112,000 jobs; a disappointing number for the 26th month of an economic recovery. But there is a silver lining in the dark labor cloud -- temporary workers and the firms that place them are booming. If you live anywhere near a primary state, you can't pick up newspaper, turn on the radio or switch on the TV without seeing a political ad. These ads are not just about new ideas and warm and fuzzy photo ops, it's about big money. Candidates are projected to spend a record $270 billion this elections cycle. So with all this money flowing into the system, whose pockets are getting lined?

In early January 2004, two spacecraft carrying identical robotic explorers will touch down on the surface of Mars. On that day, NOVA will present a special television event that climaxes with live coverage as NASA/JPL scientists await the first critical signals confirming that the rovers have landed safely. The show features a gripping behind-the-scenes glimpse of the design, testing, and launch of the mission. The engineers face a tense deadline as Mars approaches its closest rendezvous with Earth; they're stretched to the limit as parachutes rip, bolts fail, and airbags pop - everything that can go wrong does. Watch them apply all their ingenuity to overcome the technical hitches. Then join NOVA's exploration of the latest clues in the ultimate quest for signs of life on the mysterious red planet.

Some environmentalists point to the deadly heat wave in Europe last summer and the bone-chilling cold in the northeast this winter as evidence of dangerous changes in the world's weather. They also contend that the energy industry has fueled a stealth campaign to confuse the public about the hard science linking greenhouse gases to erratic climate changes. NOW examines the powerful forces at work to prevent the U.S. from ratifying the Kyoto Protocol, an international treaty limiting the production of greenhouse gases most mainstream scientists believe is behind global warming. At a key UN meeting in Milan, NOW takes a behind-the-scenes look at the organized lobbying effort aimed at stopping the treaty from becoming a reality.

April 2003 marks the 50th anniversary of one of science's great milestones - the discovery of the double-helix structure of DNA. This "cracking" of life's essential molecular "cookbook" was credited to three British scientists, James Watson, Francis Crick and Maurice Wilkins. But their breakthrough would have been impossible without the work of a brilliant molecular biologist and crystallographer named Rosalind Franklin. In 1962, when the three men were awarded a Nobel Prize for their discovery, Franklin's name wasn't even mentioned. Tragically, she had died of cancer four years earlier at age 37. The cancer was probably the result of radiation exposure she suffered while taking the x-ray photographs of the DNA that were directly responsible for decoding its structure. NOVA investigates the life of Rosalind Franklin and her unsung contribution to one of science's greatest discoveries. Through eyewitness accounts and the replication and re-enactments of numerous experiments, viewers will see the tragic story of a brilliant young woman and the male-dominated race to find the scientific secret of life.

From the huskies of the frozen north to the basenjis of the Congo River basin and the golden retrievers in America's backyards, dogs have carved a niche for themselves in every human society. How did this unique relationship develop? What can the latest breakthroughs in genetics tell us of the secrets of dog origins and breeding? And can dog sociologists and psychiatrists unravel the puzzling, lovable, and often maddening quirks of dog behavior? Despite such variation, all domestic dogs, as well as their common ancestor, the gray wolf, have virtually identical genes. How can science explain this incredible diversity? In Dogs, NOVA launches an entertaining and affectionate search for the secrets of dog variation and behavior. We'll visit state-of-the-art dog labs where the latest developments in genetic mapping and even cloning are in the air. Along the way, breeders and dog experts as well as scientists will help explore the bond we share with these remarkable animals, seeking insights into the future of our oldest and closest relationship with another animal species.

Might their premature deaths be linked to the end of Tutankhamun's family, the great 18th Dynasty that ruled Egypt during the second millennium BC? Tutankhamun was the last of the line. Why did the family die out? Had they become so inbred that they were struck down by a genetic disease? In a bid to answer those questions and draw up a complete dynastic family tree, two American scientists have been allowed to take DNA samples, for the first time, from the royal mummies and from the fetuses.

The discovery of the double helix structure of DNA is to science what the Mona Lisa is to painting. It's been called the single biggest discovery of all time. But it wasn't just stumbled upon - it was a race. It's one of science's classic stories. And the people involved retrace their footsteps to tell it in this film. Jim Watson returns to Cambridge - telling his incredible account of finding the secret of life at the age of 23. We also hear the story of Rosalind Franklin, the woman whose data Watson is accused by many of stealing. And we meet the forgotten third man of the DNA story - Maurice Wilkins, Franklin's colleague, the man who some say betrayed her. The film culminates with a rare interview, in which the reclusive Francis Crick explains how DNA makes living things. This is the definitive account of the birth of DNA science.

In 1973, two scientists undertook an experiment that rocked the world. By transferring the DNA from one species to another, Herb Boyer and Stan Cohen became the first genetic engineers. Their experiment triggered a wave of controversy about the dangers of genetic manipulation, but it also generated a multi-billion dollar industry. The second part of DNA charts the story of what happened when biologists from all over the world were called to a meeting in California to decide the future of DNA research. Perhaps certain experiments were too dangerous and should be banned? As the newly released "Andromeda Strain" was appearing in movie theaters, the public was growing scared. To quell these fears, the scientists drew up a strict set of guidelines, which everyone agreed to follow. When the panic subsided, the stage was set for a biotechnology bonanza. A race began between Herb Boyer's new company, Genentech, and a brilliant Harvard professor named Walter Gilbert to produce genetically-engineered insulin. For a year there was a frantic battle to place the human insulin gene into a bacterium and trick it into pumping out insulin. A couple of years later a young researcher named Rob Horsch, who worked for the chemical giant Monsanto, produced the first genetically-engineered plant. This work spawned a research effort that would herald the biggest revolution in agriculture since the industrialization of farming. In this film the pioneers who carried out the first genetic engineering experiments look back at how their experiments have changed the world.

The race to work out the structure of DNA 50 years ago has been eclipsed by another race -- to catalogue all the genes in the human genome. The rivalry became so bitter that presidents and prime ministers had to intervene. In an exclusive interview Bill Clinton reveals why he had to step in. The story begins in 1990 when the Human Genome Project was launched to decipher the complete instruction manual of the human being. This epic endeavor took over a decade to complete and cost billions of dollars. Eight years after its launch, a rival private bid was announced in an attempt to shut the public project down. A personal feud erupted between Craig Venter, who ran Celera's privately funded Genome Project, and Sir John Sulston, who oversaw Britain's share of the public Human Genome Project. Craig Venter believed he could finish the Human Genome several years before the public project. Jim Watson, co-discoverer of the DNA double helix, was incensed by Venter's action. The fighting became so intense that President Clinton stepped in to try to unite the two sides, who were risking jeopardizing one of the greatest scientific efforts of all time. Clinton asked a go-between to sort out the two warring groups. Over pizza and beer in a basement, the two sides agreed to a cease-fire. They would announce their draft results -- together -- in a joint celebration hosted by The White House in June 2000. In a blow-by-blow account the intricate politics of this pizza diplomacy are revealed. Fifty years after DNA's structure was discovered, the sequence of three billion letters of code that make up human DNA have been completed.

A person dies from cancer every second. "Curing Cancer" tells the story of the DNA scientists who have created a new air of hope by unravelling the mystery of cancer. Theirs is a different kind of research. Mary Claire King entered the field when it was still a man's world. It took her 21 years, but she succeeded in finding a damaged gene causing breast cancer in young women. Brian Druker took this idea of damaged DNA and turned it into a way of curing the disease. He picked an incurable cancer, chronic myeloid leukemia, and aimed the drug Gleevec squarely at the broken DNA that caused it. The strategy worked. Gleevec not only cures people with that disease but proves that with the knowledge of DNA, any cancer can be cured. Today, the prospect of more drugs that work at the level of DNA is a real one. In 1990 Gleevec was the only one in development. Today hundreds of drugs are in development that work in the same revolutionary way on different cancers. The final work for the DNA scientists is identifying all the damaged genes that cause cancer. But with the Human Genome Project finished, a single lab will be able to do this in just five years. Fifty years after the discovery of the double helix, the secret of life is finally living up to its name.

April 2003 marks the 50th anniversary of one of science's great milestones - the discovery of the double-helix structure of DNA. This "cracking" of life's essential molecular "cookbook" was credited to three British scientists, James Watson, Francis Crick and Maurice Wilkins. But their breakthrough would have been impossible without the work of a brilliant molecular biologist and crystallographer named Rosalind Franklin. In 1962, when the three men were awarded a Nobel Prize for their discovery, Franklin's name wasn't even mentioned. Tragically, she had died of cancer four years earlier at age 37. The cancer was probably the result of radiation exposure she suffered while taking the x-ray photographs of the DNA that were directly responsible for decoding its structure. NOVA investigates the life of Rosalind Franklin and her unsung contribution to one of science's greatest discoveries. Through eyewitness accounts and the replication and re-enactments of numerous experiments, viewers will see the tragic story of a brilliant young woman and the male-dominated race to find the scientific secret of life.

Length: 60

From the huskies of the frozen north to the basenjis of the Congo River basin and the golden retrievers in America's backyards, dogs have carved a niche for themselves in every human society. How did this unique relationship develop? What can the latest breakthroughs in genetics tell us of the secrets of dog origins and breeding? And can dog sociologists and psychiatrists unravel the puzzling, lovable, and often maddening quirks of dog behavior? Despite such variation, all domestic dogs, as well as their common ancestor, the gray wolf, have virtually identical genes. How can science explain this incredible diversity? In Dogs, NOVA launches an entertaining and affectionate search for the secrets of dog variation and behavior. We'll visit state-of-the-art dog labs where the latest developments in genetic mapping and even cloning are in the air. Along the way, breeders and dog experts as well as scientists will help explore the bond we share with these remarkable animals, seeking insights into the future of our oldest and closest relationship with another animal species.

Mont Blanc is one of the world's most popular destinations for Alpine climbers and scientists: no other peak has such a long record of mountaineering and glaciology. But 200 years of winter sports, science, and tourism have done nothing to tame this mountain. The hazards generated by rock falls, ice avalanches, and sudden flooding are still poorly understood and almost impossible to control. We follow a team of daring 'glacionauts' as they descend into a labyrinth of unexplored ice caves to find trapped flood water that menaces the populated valleys below.

When Howard Carter found the tomb of the boy king Tutankhamun in 1922, he also found the remains of two fetuses buried in the pharaoh's tomb. Who were they? Might their premature deaths be linked to the end of Tutankhamun's family, the great 18th Dynasty that ruled Egypt during the second millennium BC? Tutankhamun was the last of the line. Why did the family die out? Had they become so inbred that they were struck down by a genetic disease? In a bid to answer those questions and draw up a complete dynastic family tree, two American scientists have been allowed to take DNA samples, for the first time, from the royal mummies and from the fetuses.

Just in from Washington where she covered this week's 9-11 hearings, award-winning journalist Michel Martin provides a unique view of what the commission's findings mean for America's security and the war on terror.

Martin spent more than a decade reporting on politics at THE WASHINGTON POST and THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, where she was White House correspondent. Currently, you can find her at ABCNews' NIGHTLINE, where she has been a contributor for the past decade. Bill Moyers sits down with her to take a look at what's going on in Washington, and how the press gets information, probing the difference between uncovering truth and disseminating spin.
